USPA NEWS - President Hollande "decided, on proposal of Prime Minister and the ministers concerned, first, that we will maintain at a high level the Sentry operation, one that can mobilize 10,000 soldiers and more gendarmes and police, further the tragic terrorist attack of Nice on July 14th.

"We will strengthen our actions in Syria and Iraq". The state of emergency was declared by the head of state after the attacks of 13 November 2015, which made 130 deaths, was extended three times, November, February and May. The last extension on May 19, was two months, three months against the previous times, to ensure the security of the Euro 2016 football and the cycling Tour de France. The law called "penal reform", published June 4 in the Official Journal, later permitted to strengthen police and judicial arsenal in the fight against terrorism. This law, "it is not a transposition of the state of emergency, but it is a tool to do without a state of emergency" had explained the socialist rapporteur of the text to the national Assembly member for Seine-Saint-Denis Pascal Popelin. "We will strengthen our actions in Syria and Iraq. We will continue to strike those who attack us in their den, "also said Mr. Holland, suggesting he attributed the responsibility for the attack on the organization Islamic State (EI), but not explicitly mentioned.
